1. Want To Know Which Media, Think Tanks & Health Agencies The Bill & Melinda Gates Foundation (BMGF) Are Funding In the UK

This is probably going to be the last thread of 2021 but I'll be back with a vengeance in 2022. My work is only just beginning.

2. I've done quite a few threads on BMGF and in particular their funding of British Universities and their ties with the World Economic Forum. However, the funding of BMGF goes far deeper than that.

3. BMGF are highly influential within the British media. The figures are really quite eye watering. The BBC have been the voice of propaganda throughout, and you can see why as they are in the pocket of BMGF to the tune of at least $56 million

With 18,273 comments, many were not impressed.

I don't think I have ever seen a man so happy, in the middle of a catastrophic, devastating, world crisis. He is smiling and rubbing his hands together with the glee of a big time winner.

Odd Bill wont give his children vaccines. Perhaps the first question the interviewer should have asked. Will you give this to your kids on camera, and can we check for side effects, and fertility in the coming years?

It could be too late for any kind of fair distribution of coronavirus vaccines because of the deals already made by rich countries, according to Mark Suzman, chief executive of the Bill & Melinda Gates Foundation.

Despite the unprecedented pace of scientific progress on the development of vaccines, he said it remains “really, really complicated” to ensure they are produced and distributed fairly.

9. Although not officially a media outlet (although many would say he is) Tony Blair has been doing the bidding of BMGF from the outset.

As far back as 2006 in The New York Times in an article titled "A Bit of Good News for Blair: ID Cards for Britons Advance."

A Bit of Good News for Blair: ID Cards for Britons Advance

By Alan Cowell

Feb. 14, 2006

LONDON, Feb. 13 - The government of Prime Minister Tony Blair faced down its opposition on Monday in a politically charged vote in the House of Commons on a plan to introduce mandatory national identification cards. The vote moved Britain closer to the use of such cards but did not make clear precisely when that would be.

Despite a rebellion by about 20 members of Mr. Blair's own Labor Party, the government won the vote, 310 to 279. A defeat would have been Mr. Blair's fourth humiliation in Parliament since the general election last year -- and since taking power in 1997 -- raising doubts about his authority in his third term of office.

In the May election his majority was cut to just 64 votes, meaning that a relatively small number of dissident Labor legislators can derail his legislative plans. By surviving the challenge on Monday, Mr. Blair was seen as scoring a qualified victory.

Mr. Blair was not in the Commons for the vote because engine failure grounded an airplane that was to fly him back from South Africa.

The vote was the first of two major challenges this week. The second is expected Wednesday in a further vote on counterterrorism legislation.

In the vote on Monday, the Commons rejected an amendment from the House of Lords that would have made optional, instead of mandatory, a plan to require Britons to be given national identity cards when they apply for passports. But in a compromise worked out among the legislators, Parliament will have to pass another law to make the new rules binding.

The government argues that the biometric information in both the new passports and the ID's, like fingerprints and iris scans, will help the police fight terrorism, organized crime and identity fraud.

The House of Lords, which has often challenged the government on civil rights issues, will debate its proposal again and could provoke a constitutional stalemate if it refuses to accept the Monday vote in the Commons.

Mandatory identity cards are part of a package of measures that Mr. Blair's government is seeking, saying Britain needs to tighten its internal security procedures, particularly after the attacks in London in July, in which four bombers killed 52 travelers on subway trains and a bus.

But Parliament has thrown out some proposals, like one to increase the permitted period of detention without charge or trial to 90 days.

Before the vote on Monday, Gordon Brown, chancellor of the exchequer and Mr. Blair's heir apparent, said at a meeting, "We should do all in our power to prevent you or I having our identity stolen or abused, and to ensure that, for each of us, our identity is secure and protected."

10. The article said, "The government of Prime Minister Tony Blair faced down its opposition on Monday in a politically charged vote in the House of Commons on a plan to introduce mandatory national identification cards"

For years Blair has been pushing the idea of a Digital ID.

11. More recently he appeared on BBC Newsnight saying he thought people will need a digital ID in the fight against the virus.

How correct he was

He received the small sum of $29.6m from BMGF. He has been appointed as the UK Czar for Digital IDs
